CLOSING REMARKS
Alex Mills, Associate Dean, Students
EXCELLENCE IN TEACHING AWARDS
PRESENTED TO:

Junior Tenure Stream Faculty

Derek Jackson
Department of Chemistry

If you were to read the many nomination letters for Dr. Jackson, and if you’d struggled yourself to get through organic chemistry, I think you might even consider taking it again with him! According to the students he teaches, organic chemistry is no longer something to be dreaded, but rather it’s something to look forward to. That is indeed an accomplishment! Creative and passionate are used many times to describe Dr. Jackson, and clear and engaging are used many times to describe his lectures. Students appreciate his zeal, his commitment, his attention to understanding rather than memorizing, his effective use of technology, and even his frequent jokes.

Congratulations Derek!

Senior Tenure Stream Faculty

Patricia Lakin-Thomas
Department of Biology

If there’s one prevailing sentiment expressed in the many student letters of support for Dr. Lakin-Thomas’ nomination, it’s that she is very generous with her time for students. She evidently has an open-door policy, and time and again, students express appreciation for the comfort they experience in asking her questions. They are always treated with respect and leave with greater understanding. Professor Lakin-Thomas is considered a masterful lecturer who attends to processing, analyzing, and applying knowledge, not the mere memorization of it. And, when a student says she appreciates a professor for writing creative and intellectually challenging exams, that is high praise indeed.

Congratulations Pat!
EXCELLENCE IN RESEARCH AWARDS

PRESENTED TO:

Early Career Research Award

Jennifer Chen
Department of Chemistry

Professor Jennifer Chen’s research focuses on the materials and physical chemistry of nanostructures with potential applications ranging from solar energy conversion to biosensing. Her lab uses a wide range of characterization methods and various optical spectroscopies to explain the interplay between materials properties and functions.

“Her work is not only of basic scientific interest, but is likely to result in new classes of highly sensitive and selective chip-based chemical sensors, a field that promises major impact in the medical and clinical industries.” – Colleague

Established Research Award

Eric Hessels
Department of Physics and Astronomy

Professor Eric Hessels uses lasers to make high-precision measurements of atomic properties to test the predictions of Quantum Electrodynamics and the Standard Model of particle physics. A current focus of the lab is to study the electric dipole moment of the electron.

“His very precise result [...] eliminated proposed alternatives to the Standard Model in one fell swoop. His work has gained worldwide attention, and he is being bombarded with invitations to give lectures about it.” - Colleague

Excellence in Graduate Mentorship

Mark Bayfield
Department of Biology

Professor Mark Bayfield’s research is concerned with how conserved mechanisms in RNA metabolism function in both general cellular processes and adaptations to stress. A major focus is on the La protein, which is an abundant, ubiquitous factor with several roles in RNA metabolism that are conserved between yeast and humans.

“As a mentor and supervisor, he helped me find my love of research and every day continues to encourage and support me any way he can. I am incredibly grateful for the opportunity to work with him.” – Current Graduate Student
